"a bold voice that asserts instant authority...Franklin's confident delivery ensures an indelible impression."
--Performing Songwriter Magazine

"Jenn Franklin proves that there are still true artists in the music industry. This album is edgy, beautiful, poignant, soulful, and richly satisfying, not to mention extremely cool. She surpasses most independent artists you will find these days."

-iTunes Music Review

"songs detailing the heartfelt truth of the human spirit. Errors & Admissions is a cutting, powerful epic work of passion and raw rock, spilling over with colorful, stirring vocals."
--Performer Magazine

"a great start for a musician that is starting to attract attention around the world." -BMA Magazine

Jenn Franklin's musical beginnings were in rural Kansas, where she began singing in rock bands at age twelve, wowing crowds by covering such artists as Heart, Janis Joplin, and Aretha Franklin. All the while, she was writing powerful pop-rock songs on piano. After her college graduation at Wichita State University, she moved to Nashville, where she met recent Berklee Music graduate, Peter Overton. The two collaborated to record a six-song debut EP, "Errors & Admissions." The project was well received with music critics and helped to launch some national exposure for Franklin's music, landing two song placements on an MTV show, as well as national college radio airplay.

Franklin then met artist/producer, Jim Reilley, founding member of The New Dylans and a staff writer at Curb Music Publishing. Reilley had seen Jenn perform live and approached her about making a full-length album together, calling in the talents of top-notch musicians like Ken Coomer (formerly of Wilco), Charlie Chadwick (Shelby Lynne, Steve Earl), and Bryn Davies (Patty Griffin). The new album titled, "Girl Invisible," shows Franklin to be a kindred songstress to artists like Sarah McLachlan, Aimee Mann, and Sara Bareilles, but with a voice undeniably all her own.
